Louise Turner pens prize poem

INVITATION by Louise Turner, FSHS junior, has been given Special Mention by the National High School Poetry Association and will appear in the Annual Anthology of High School Poetry. The inspiration for the "Invitation" came, according to Louise, as she was ironing a dress at her home one day last fall. Looking out the window, she noticed the falling leaves being blown about by the wind and, as she ironed, composed the poem in her mind. The words down her thoughts in free verse and later submitted her entry. This is the first of a series of poems Louise has written this year.

Senior sponsor earns salute from FSHS

by Betty Fleming

THE TIME is nearly here for the seniors to be graduating. One class has backed them all the way through the year. Dining hall Miss Wilma Jimerson, senior class sponsor, "a class needs a good sponsor and Miss Jimerson very capably besides maintaining a high grade point throughout her high school career, Louise serves as columnist for the Grizzly, and is a member of Class-Bomber, Quill and Scroll, and the Latin Honor Society. She recently received a superior rating for columns writing at the annual press day at Tulsa University, Oklahoma.

Louise's prize-winning poem is as follows: Autumn leaves of gold and brown, I saw you come fluttering down a lonesome city street. And as you came hurrying, scurrying by, the wind which bore you on caressed my cheek and whispered in my ear of far-away places so rare.

It whispered in my ear of far-away Siam, autumn in Paris, and the burning desert sands.

And while I dreamed of all those, and more, my practical mind said, "You must stay here, you must."

But my adventurous heart burst out to you and cried, "Wait—please—can't you see—"
